Description of event:

We cannot change the centrality of water – so we must change our ways to handle it. Globally, we have the technologies and solutions needed to overcome our common water challenges. We need partnerships across governments, countries, cities, regions, companies and sectors around the world to share knowledge, accelerate implementation and mobilize funding. Partnerships of all kinds are crucial for developing innovative solutions to sustainable water management and ensure that the right people are working together.

The Danish water sector is one of the world's most efficient when it comes to service delivery and water and energy consumption. Denmark has relevant experience on modernizing the water sector through public-private partnerships, and Denmark's global partnerships with India and South Africa on water management contribute with valuable solutions and knowledge. Such partnerships are crucial to deliver tangible results for implementation of the SDG6 and ensure our cities and communities are resilient, reliable and sustainable and can protect our planet for future generations.

The objective of this event is to gather experience and share knowledge about concrete international and cross-sectoral partnerships on water. Cases will be drawn from around the world to reflect the diverse needs and circumstances that exist. A panel discussion will focus on how partnerships can help fund sustainable water projects and sustainable urban solutions. Speakers will include ministers from South Africa and India and representatives from California, from organizations and from the private sector.
